NWC DROUGHT AFFECTED SYSTEMS

There are about 90 of the NWC's 450 water supply systems across the island that are now being affected by varying degrees of drought conditions.

Most affected water supply systems are in the Eastern Division. The worst affected systems are mainly surface-water-fed systems mainly in Portland (8 systems), St. Mary (8 systems), St. Ann (10 systems), St. Thomas (4 systems), Clarendon (11 systems), Kingston and St. Andrew (31 systems). The worst affected systems are in St. Ann where 3 systems (Higgin Town, Dawson and Content) have dried up entirely and 4 other systems (Seville #1, New Ground, Avisfield and Blackstonedge) each declining to as little as 9% - 10% of normal production; and in Rural St. Andrew where the Violet Bank system has also dried up.

In the Corporate Area, the declining inflows have resulted in both the 393MG-capacity Hermitage Dam and the 809MG-capacity Mona Reservoir falling to 37.5% and 26.2% of their respective capacities. Night-time restrictions have consequently been imposed on the Mona and Hope water supply systems.

While being system-specific, a range of normal drought mitigation measures are being implemented to include:

- Regulating of supplies
- Trucking of water
- Accessing additional sources of water
- Maximising existing sources of supply
- Reducing losses from systems and improving the distribution network
- Improving the capacity to share water from least-affected systems with worst-affected systems
- Expediting water supply improvement projects that could possibly assist in drought mitigation
- Public education and conservation education

Normal operations continue on the majority of NWC systems despite the drought, either because of the resilient nature of those particular systems, the rainfall in those watersheds or mitigation measures already implemented by the Commission. The listing below provides further details.
